

White Brothers has proudly served the Bay Area for over 140 years, with a history that has spanned several generations of one family and survived such events as the great San Francisco earthquake.

Formed in 1868, White Brothers began as the Straut-White Company, originally located in San Francisco at Sacramento and Davis streets. In 1872, Peter White, one of the partners, was joined by his brother, Asa. Together they bought out Straut's interests and renamed the company White Brothers.

with a supply of hardwood lumber. In the spirit of helping to rebuild the city, White Brothers did not take advantage of the disaster by raising its prices.

In 1910, the company moved to Fifth and Brannan Streets where it stayed until 1948. Jacob's son, Charles Harry White, managed the company from 1920 to 1948, at which time the company moved across the Bay to Oakland. From there, C.H. White's sons, Don, Charles and their cousin, W.T.

White, Jr., carried on the tradition of the founders.

a third brother, Jacob joined the firm.

The following years were prosperous for White Brothers, and to keep pace with a growing business and an increasing inventory, the company expanded into larger and larger spaces. They moved their headquarters from their original location to Market and California, then to Main near the docks, then to Spear and Howard.

It was at this location that disaster struck. An April 18, 1906, the San Francisco earthquake and fire all but leveled the city. Incredibly, the inventory at White Brothers was spared, leaving it the only company in San Francisco 1910 Fifth & Brannan Streets. The horses used to pull the trucks were a source of pride for the company. They were matched for color, mane & tail - literally a matched pair. The teamsters arrived at 4:00 am to feed and curry them, the harness them up. The day would end about 6:00 pm.

Now, a fourth generation White, Don F. White, Jr., continues the proud 140 year old tradition that is the White Brothers Hardwood Lumber Company. Over the years, White Brothers has developed an excellent reputation for quality millwork and outstanding service. Today our commitment to quality and service is stronger than ever. As the company has grown, so has our focus on high quality millwork.
